

Our Lady Immaculate
Catholic Primary School
A Multi-Academy

In October 1845, Fr. Charles King opened the Immaculate Conception school-chapel. The parish church was built two years later. The school has since served generations of families from Chelmsford and beyond. Today, Our Lady Immaculate School is situated on a much-extended site and is part of a vibrant parish. The school aims to provide an excellent and distinctive Catholic education to prepare pupils to meet the demands of the 21st Century.

Our Lady Immaculate is a slightly smaller than average primary school. The majority of our children are of White British heritage; however, the proportion of pupils from minority ethnic groups and those who speak English as an additional language is increasing and is now above national. The proportion of disabled pupils and those who have special educational needs is average. The proportion of pupils for whom the school receives the pupil premium (additional government funding, in this case for pupils known to be eligible for free school meals) is low.

The school has consistently met the government's current floor standards, which set the minimum expectations for pupils' attainment and progress in English and mathematics.
